CINCO DE MAYO

IS THE P.C. DYNASTY IN ITS DEATH RATTLE?

RACHEL'S ON A ROLL, THE WILDROSE SEEMS POISED FOR RESURRECTION, AND IT'S STARTING TO LOOK LIKE J.P.'S GAMBLE WAS A MISTAKE. WITH ONLY A FEW DAYS LEFT, CAN THE RICH TORY MACHINE MUSTER THE POWER TO PREVAIL ONCE MORE, OR WILL 13 BE ITS UNLUCKY NUMBER?

Oh why oh why oh why did I do it? one imagines Jim Prentice wailing in those ugly early hours when all the nasties — doubt, regret, fatigue, self-recrimination — swoop through the bedroom window to murder sleep and gorge themselves on the bitter juices of a troubled spleen.

It was, after all, a calculated risk, this early election call. And what a risk it was! Who goes to the polls in an economic downturn with a budget that is all medicine and no sugar? A budget that gives the Keynesian left and the Hayekian right a cavalcade of targets on which to train their blunderbusses? A budget that only a rational person could love?

J.P. is a rational person. He devised a budget that, in our view — and in the view of a good number of economists — was about the best he could have done under the circumstances that included a $7B drop in oil revenue and an overpriced gov't workforce with locked-in pay increases that couldn't be cut without a rebellion.

To mollify the left, the contracts were honoured, there were protections for the under-$100K-p.a. middle class, cash and tax relief for the poor, progressive tax increases for the upper-middle and wealthy classes, and deficit borrowing to build schools, hospitals and LRT trains.

To mollify the right, there were spending cuts in the higher echelons of health care, an effective freeze on education spending, cuts to politicians' pay, no raises for management-level gov't employees, and no increases to corporate taxes or oil royalties.

And to allay the perennial bleatings from both political hemi-

POLITICAL PULSE

TAINTED LOVE

JONO & BREANNA KAPUT; LALL'S LABOURS LOST

Love gone wrong. Where would art be without it. And politics? Well, politics is an art form, n'est-ce pas? And the last couple of weeks of misadventures in the Tory atelier have been energized by love of that tainted sort, bringing down a cabinet minister and thwarting a young PC hopeful whose chances of political advancement seem to have been dashed in tragic fashion. Ah, the things we do for love!

The minister is (or was) Attorney General Jonathan Denis, 38, the short, balding, somewhat captious and vaguely Napoleonic Calgary lawyer, who became the second youngest minister appointed in Alberta when Ed Stelmach gave him Housing & Urban Affairs in 2010.

After Alison Redford gave him Justice in May of 2012, Jono (as he is known) proved competent, but not particularly visionary. There were no scandals or major flubs. And the very fact that he survived in the portfolio through the sturm und drang, the rise and fall, and the three premiers in three years suggests a certain resiliency.

Meanwhile he'd found himself a woman in 2013, and what a looker! Breanna Palmer, was as tall and beautiful as he wasn't: an Edmonton-born, raven-haired model and photographer who was a finalist in the 2010 Miss Universe Canada pageant. Denizens of the Twittersphere know her as a woman with an obsessive need to post artful photos of herself. On April 23, for instance, Breanna posted 46 different Instagram shots of her lovely self.

It could hardly be described as a meeting of minds, and Jono's friends asked one another just what kind of bond might exist. The word "gold-digger" would occasionally arise.

Nonetheless, the pair tied the knot last Oct. 11 at the same evangelical, gay-marriage-unfriendly Centre Street Church where Education Minister Gordon Dirks sometimes pastors. They postponed their planned Hawaiian honeymoon to work on Dirks' by-election campaign in Calgary Elbow.

At the time we described Breanna as the "receptionist" in the campaign office, which is how the campaign manager had described her. But on by-election night Breanna sweetly informed us that she was in fact the "office manager." She also gave us a poppy and showed off a classically posed photo of her and Jono.

A little later on that joyous evening Jono, leaving early sans wife, was less gracious. On the way out he growled, "My wife is not a receptionist..." Pronouncing the word as he might pronounce "crack whore." "She's the office manager."

I later heard from an acquaintance of the couple that, despite the sweetness accorded me, it had been Breanna who insisted Jono upbraid me for the faux pas. "Pussy whipped," was the acquaintance's observation. We weren't aware they had a cat.

God knows what has transpired between the two since, but last weekend, at Premier Jim Prentice's request, Denis announced he was stepping down as justice minister & spheres upset with Alberta's over reliance on oil revenue, additional revenue streams would come from the increased income taxes, the more than 50 increases to fees and taxes on everything from gasoline to alcohol to death certificates, and of course the health care levy. All of this would cushion the blows of resource revenue dips, and, when oil prices bounced back, would produce surpluses to pay down the debt and shore up the Contingency and Heritage Savings Trust Funds.

Sensible. Rational. Or, as Prentice keeps on telling us, "Prudent," a word favoured by a certain comedian impersonating George H.W. Bush in the early 1990s, viz: "Not gonna do it. Wouldn't be prudent at this juncture."

After much discussion with his inner circle, Prentice decided that taking the budget to the people at this juncture was in fact prudent. A better bet, he felt, than going into budget debates and giving the opposition a chance to eviscerate the thing before an election. And—bonus!—an immediate election would hit the Wildrose while they were still recovering from the December floor crossings, and with a new leader who'd barely had time to lace up his skates before the puck was dropped.

Unfortunately sensible, rational and prudent are things that have little bearing on elections, as J.P. has discovered to his dismay these last three and a half weeks. Poll after poll has shown Rachel Notley's NDP building momentum in all of Edmonton, and parts of Calgary and Lethbridge, while the Rosers have not only healed from the Decembrist Decimation, but seem poised to equal or exceed the 17 seats they had before in the stick.

And while most of the earlier polls were of the dubious, automated robo-call variety, a more reputable survey, by Leger Marketing, released by Post Media on Thursday backed them up. This is how the poll, which surveyed 1,180 eligible voters between Sunday and Tuesday, broke it down among decided voters province wide:

NDP	PC	WR	LIB	AP

We spoke to some party insiders with the Tories and the Wildrose who reported that their internal polls told much the same story.

Edmonton, it seems, has been lost to the Orange Horde, and the battle grounds are now in Calgary, the smaller cities, and the rural areas, where, according to the polls, the three main parties are neck and neck.

Thus in the few days before the election we shall see all of the leaders in those closely contested areas.

As for the air campaign, expect lots of Tory ads—they have the biggest budget—going after the NDP and its carefully masked statist policies.

Prentice began that campaign this week, speaking to a strangely subdued Tory crowd of around 1,600 at the Edmonton Premier's Dinner on Thursday night. While still selling his budget as the prudent alternative, he specifically attacking NDP policies such as the proposed abandonment of the problematic Northern Gateway and Keystone XL pipelines.

"We don't need a pipeline policy that feels like it's been scripted by Thomas Mulcair," Prentice said. "Fundamentally, the NDP could undermine the heart of Alberta's economy."

Notley, the former environment critic, has toned down her anti- "tarsands" rhetoric since she became leader, and during a recent appearance could not be drawn out on the subject of cap-and-trade, that had just been adopted by Ontario. "We need to sit down and talk about these things," she said.

One can expect the Tories to dredge up some of her more extreme environmental and statist rhetoric from Hansard in the days ahead. (Rachel's "lake of fire" probably has something to do with tailings ponds.)

But that may not be enough to turn the Orange tide. At least in terms of the polls.

Where the Tories have the advantage over their competitors is on the ground. The party has rich constituencies with $60K or $70 to spend on signs, events, telephonists, local radio ads, and transportation for voters on polling day. The Wildrose and NDP constituencies consider themselves rich if they have $30K. Most have less than $10K.

So in the end the Tories may in fact regain their majority on election day by dint of better logistics (not to mention a far deeper talent pool of candidates than the NDP or the Wildrose).

But even if the Tories retain a slight majority—and we are predicting 47 seats for the Tories (see the election chart starting on p. 4)—this election will have been a close call and a bad bet for Jim Prentice. And he doesn't seem to be improving his game as he goes along.

Perhaps he needs new people. Campaign manager Randy Dawson might have peaked with the Ed Stelmach win in 2008. If communications manager Mike Storeshaw is writing the speeches, perhaps he needs to take a rest. Or maybe he has. The stump speech does not seem to have changed in two months, and if we have to listen to that same old anecdote about Jim Prentice's campaign encounter with a hostile trailer park resident who doesn't recognize him... And then there's those flat TV spots! Isn't it time that the ad maven Margaret Bateman, who's running Jimbo's advertising campaign, retire to the coast where she can pursue her true calling: painting seascapes?

But there is only so much lipstick one can apply to the porker. For Prentice's main problem remains. He fails to connect with the hoi polloi. He's smart, sensible, and prudent, but, no matter how many times he dons a Flames jersey or tells the tired old story about working "under the coal bins" as youth, he fails to reach the ordinary people.

Somehow Prentice needs to bring his message down to earth. Ralph Klein could do this. Peter Lougheed couldn't, but then it didn't matter in those halcyon days of infinite revenue.

Jimbo may yet squeak out this election with a slim majority. Perhaps it will serve as a wake-up call.

Insight's Guide to the 2015

Alberta's 29th general election will be held on Tuesday, May 4, with just the Progressive Conservatives and the NDP fielding full slates of 87 candidates, with the Wildrose being one short in Edmonton-Strathcona (not that anyone has a hope in hell of unseating NDP Leader and woman of the hour Rachel Notley- although the Rosers had a full house last time.) The Liberals, who are expected to virtually disappear, also ran a full slate in 2012, but this time around struggled to drum up 52 volunteers as cannon fodder to augment their two remaining MLAs, both of whom could become part of the ballistics, victims of the NDP's greedy gobbling of the left predicted by pollsters, pundits & other Dipper plumpers. If you care, the Alberta Party squeezed out 34 candidates, four fewer than last. The Greenies were down two from the 25 they ran in '12. Oddly, there are a full 5 Social Credit Candidates running, two more than last time. Must be replicating. We'll look into it later.

Alberta General Election

Conventional wisdom this year is that voter turnout will be abysmal, possibly even besting (or worsting) the 2008 nadir, when just 41% of eligible voters contributed to the Ed Stelmach landslide (a respectable 57% showed for the Alison-Danielle slugfest in 2012). Certainly during our peregrinations on the door-knocking trail we heard much anecdotal info about citizens with no idea there was an election on. But isn't that always the way? With the economy down and a real horse race afoot, we believe we might even hit 60%. We also have some thoughts on who might win each riding, as you will see in the guide to the candidates on the following six pages. Tune in next week to see just how wrong we were. Meanwhile some facts: Budget for 2015 election: $23.5M. 2012 cost: $13M. Reason for hike: twice the staff, more advertising, more polling stations. Number of people hired for the election: 18,000 (up from 17K in '12, because of population increase). Pay for election day: $210 + $60 for training.

solicitor general. Agriculture Minister Verlyn Olson, who was justice minister prior to Redford's appointment of Denis, resumed his former portfolio on an interim basis.

"My wife and I have had difficulties in our marriage over the last several months," Jono explained in a brief statement. Because the matter was now before the courts, the conflict required him to withdraw. He will continue to campaign for his Calgary-Acadia riding, however, and those helping him with the campaign think he may benefit from the sympathy vote.

Palmer's launch of what appears to be some kind of divorce/restraint action in the middle of the campaign (a Calgary judge has imposed a publication ban) suggests a certain vindictiveness attends this case.

Breanna has been attempting to solicit court costs through a crowd-sourcing site this week, and, at this writing, had secured US$50 towards a target of $35,000. Perhaps she should work on her pitch. Under the site heading "The Story," she has simply written "Hi, My name is Breanna Palmer. I need to raise a significant amount of money."

Meanwhile on Thursday, Denis was photographed leaving court with another woman on his arm: his mom.

Still on the subject of romantic discord, restraining orders, and Jonathan Denis: there's an update on the curious Jamie Lall case.

As previously reported (Insight, Apr. 17), Lall, 30, a bright, brown, and bonny second-generation Sikh with lots of Tory friends, is the charity worker who was disqualified at the last minute from the Chestermere-Rocky View nomination race, receiving the news in a text from party executive assistant Kelley Charlebois.

Charlebois and Prentice insisted that he had been disqualified for cause, but Lall told us and other media that he had done nothing wrong, and that the disqualification was done simply to make sure that Bruce McAllister—the ex-Roser floor-crosser—did not befall the same fate at nomination as had three other ex-Rosers on March 28, including former leader Danielle Smith.

"Jamie knows why he was disqualified," a Tory operative told us when we related Lall's explanation. "Ask him."

So we phoned him again but got the same answer.

Then, as if to back up Lall's pose as a victim of Machiavelian politics, several more Chestermere constituency members quit last week to protest Tory HQ's highhandedness.

Denis enters the picture in the form of text messages, released this week, that he'd sent to his young friend Lall in March after Lall had asked why the party was using a private investigator to vet his nomination.

"They're trying to dq [disqualify] you," Denis texted him. As for Charlebois' assertion that all candidates were vetted by Pls, Denis wrote, "BS.BS.BS... Buddy you are being set up. They're playing you for a dumb kid." Denis recommended he retain a lawyer and said he could find him a good one who would work pro bono.

Prior to these texts being revealed, Prentice and Charlebois had been tight-lipped on the matter, insisting simply that Lall had been disqualified for good reason. With this dirty laundry now being aired, the reason finally came out: a restraining order filed by a former girlfriend in December of 2007.

"He is extremely verbally abusive towards me and my family..." read the girl's application, obtained by the Calgary Herald. "the respondent has threatened me and my family and has shown to be aggressive and short-tempered. He is incredibly unstable and I am scared because I have no idea what he wants or will do next."

Lall says that was a long time ago, they were young, the girl embellished the application, and that they were now close friends. He claims he disclosed the order during the party's vetting order this year.

Charlebois, however, says Lall did not reveal the existence of the restraining order, and this lie of omission sealed his fate.

"We had a half-hour long conversation." Charlebois told the paper. "As part of that conversation, I expressed to him my extreme disappointment he had not come clean about this."

Lall is now running as an independent in the riding. Good luck with that.

Talk ... ... in the Corridors

Xiao faces turbulence...

● Edmonton-McClung MLA David Xiao, 53, who tried to run for the federal Conservatives last year, but was rejected by the party's nomination committee, returned to his provincial constituency association in a foul mood. There was a temper tantrum, and subsequent resignations, including that of the interim president Amanda Nielson, 28, who competed with Xiao for the McClung nomination and lost narrowly.

Replacement president Graham Fletcher was also forced to quit a couple of weeks back after making some impolitic statements about Islam and Sharia law. Now we hear that more members of the executive have left to join Nielson to work for NDP candidate Lorne Dach, an elderly realtor who has run unsuccessfully several times.

While Dach is no doubt hoping to ride Rachel Notley's wave into office, we have our doubts about McClungers—a largely affluent, professional & entrepreneurial group—being willing to drink the orange Kool Aid.

If Xiao is as unpopular in the riding as some anecdotal door-knocking stories suggest, we suspect that Wildrosier Steve Thompson, 52, a businessman who has been campaigning hard for months, is the more likely replacement.

Pint-sized politico...

● Farmer Danny Hozak, 62, the Wildrosier trying for a second time to knock off Tory incumbent and veterinarian Dr. Richard Starke in the riding of Vermilion-Lloydminster, has a pretty good campaign going: lots of volunteers, all of the signs from the 2012 election, the endorsements of former treasurer Lloyd Snelgrove and local federal MP Leon Benoit, and about $30K in the war chest.

This time around he also has a secret weapon in the form of his 5-year-old grandson Tyler Pierce, a politically precocious lad who, unnerved by his grandfather's tales of a gov't that "wants to take away all your money" wanted to help out.

So Danny printed up some cards like the one shown here, which Tyler carries in his shirt pocket and proudly hands out to his fellow Grade 1 students and teachers. Danny says the kids take them home and several parents have phoned wanting to get involved in the campaign.

The week ahead ...

MAY 1 & 2—Final two days of advance polling between 9 a.m. and 8 p.m. To find the location of your advance polling station and the election-day polling station go to: <http://wtv.elections.ab.ca/wtWhereDoIVote.cfm>

MAY 1 & 2 Election day. Polls open at 9 A.M. (a pain for those of us who like to vote before going to work; perhaps their TWFs were sent packing), they close at 8 p.m. Click on the link above to find out where.
